Infrastructure Development and the Importance of Innovation

The Continued Development of Infrastructure and the Importance of Innovation.

Do Communities Need a Solid Infrastructure?

The answer to this question is rather unconventional and can be answered with yet another question: Do we need innovation to develop necessary services to help us accomplish our goals - in a shorter time and more effectively?

The answer to both the above questions is most certainly yes, as just within the international community, over 50% of the population have moved to major cities. Therefore, reliable infrastructure and renewable energy have become more important than ever before.

Technological progress is the key to finding lasting solutions to economic and environmental challenges. Creating new job opportunities, promoting renewable energy and sustainable industries, investing in scientific research and innovation are vital factors in facilitating sustainable development. Investment in infrastructure and innovation is one of the 17 United Nation's Sustainable Development Goals that make up the 2030 Agenda.

Economic Development

Communities Cannot Progress Without Economic and Human Development.

Economic development is the backbone of long-term productive potential of any economy. Growth trends are an indication of Gross National Product and growth rate measures require series of data collected over years, as average growth rates peak during different economic cycles for each economy.

Several factors which affect the process of economic development:

Changes in real exchange rate;

- Cyclical fluctuations in Gross National Product and foreign trade.
- Financial instability, such as an unsustainable credit boom and decline in savings
- Fluctuation of world prices for basic imports and exports.
- Military conflicts and political instability.
- Natural disasters and other destabilizing events.
- Drastic changes or mutations in the technology industry.

SAFE AND STABLE ENVIRONMENT

Safe and Stable Environment

Potable Water and Sanitation is Essential for Survival

According to recent statistics, every 15 seconds a child dies from water-borne disease; this is due to substandard methods of sewage treatment and poor hygiene. Contaminated water supply is the cause of diseases such as cholera and infant diarrhea, which kills five million people around the world annually.

WFDP strives to ensure that each criteria is met diligently. Through the tireless efforts of The World Fund for Development and Planning, accessibility to safe water and basic sanitation has increased by 50% in remote areas for member states.

More than half the population in villages in Africa suffer from water related diseases. Young children, mostly girls are forced to walk long distances in order to draw safe water from communal wells. This has a direct negative impact on the community, as it denies children, particularly young girls their right to education and a healthy, carefree life.

WFDP assists governments in advancing technologically and promoting health education; as well as ensuring that households have access to water and basic sanitation. The World Fund for Development and Planning believes in the importance of educating educators, as this allows them to instill basic knowledge and create awareness about the importance of health and hygiene among the younger population.

OUR HUMANITARIAN MISSION WE BELIEVE. Therefore we continuously strive to pave the way for future generations. We aim to construct the utopian ideal of a civilization of the finest structure. Women Empowerment:

Women are The Driving Force of Families and Communities:

Globally there are more women in power today, than ever before. Women are leaders in economy, science, politics, industry and technology. WFDP recognizes the importance of paving the way for more women to participate across all sectors, as this is the key to building a strong economy in communities that need a driving economic force. One of the major International Affairs agendas is improving the quality of life for women, as this in turn improves the quality of life for children, men, families and communities as a whole.

WFDP's principles of empowering women has been developed in conjunction with the United Nations Women's Global Charter for Humanity and is available as a practical guideline on how to empower women in the workplace, marketplace and community, both in the private and public sector. The principles have been designed to support existing companies in reviewing current policies and practices and to the benefit of new institutions as well.

In short the principles are:

Advocate gender equality by encouraging and supporting women to lead top companies

Ensure equal respect, non-discrimination and fair treatment of all employees at work (men and women)

Guarantee health, safety and stability of all employees

Improve the efficiency of education, training and professional development for women

Support equal rights initiatives throughout the community

OUR HUMANITARIAN MISSION WE BELIEVE. Therefore we continuously strive to pave the way for future generations. We aim to construct the utopian ideal of a civilization of the finest structure. Development is An Effective Partnership and Alliance

“The world needs to adopt a collective vision for implementing development measures to create a better future.”

The move towards an open trading and financial system includes a commitment to binding legislation and laws to work towards humanitarian development and poverty alleviation. Eradicating poverty, disease and hunger, in addition to providing accessible healthcare and education for all, is not only important for each community or individual state, but for the international community as a whole.

The World Fund for Development and Planning addresses the urgent needs of developing countries, which neglected economic growth. A comprehensive solution to the debt problems of such countries, should account for the individual requirements, as well as geographical circumstances such as; isolation in the case of islands, or limited access in the case of landlocked countries. This is where education, involvement, participation and empowerment of the younger population of such countries becomes a key factor in their development.

WFDP works hand-in-hand with the private sector in every industry to ensure that the population directly reaps the benefit of any advancement in each individual sector. A classic example of such, is the direct involvement of pharmaceutical companies in this initiative, which allows for ease of access to essential medication for all, at discounted rates in developing countries.

Alliances and partnerships are invaluable to any organization, as they provide a vast network for spreading the organization's message and vision, as well as accelerating the rate of which it achieves its goals. The World Fund for Development and Planning is always looking for and forward to strengthening its existing partnerships and forming new coalitions.

WFDP works in cooperation and has strategic partnerships in place with most international organizations working under the United Nations umbrella. As well as close collaboration with global health initiatives, governments, donor agencies, humanitarian organizations, NGO's, IGO's, media bodies, universities, associations and communities.

WFDP has implemented a strategy of excellence in terms of generation of ideas and knowledge transfer in every category as well as women's and children's rights to amēbrate their living standards.

As part of the Fund's pledge to support children, we encourage the involvement of youth as partners and participants in decision-making; to create economic awareness and instill social responsibility, as we believe that our children are ourfuture.

The World Fund for Development and Planning is always on call and ready to visit all schools, orphanages or nursing homes to assess and improve the ease of access to basic needs. The President and the team coordinate global efforts to promote children's rights.

WFDP's mission is to expand its current working capacity by implementing multilateral partnerships with other agencies, organizations and governments, in order to remain a moving force amongst communities that continue to benefit from its support.
